A LITTLE MISTAKE.

It is well known that in legal matters It is well known that in legal matters havyers often commit the most egregious blunders, and at least three judges and one Lord Chalicellor have had their wills disputed. Only recently an eminent Q. C., an ornament of the chancery bar, left a will so very abstruse in its construction that his family, all being on the most friendly (grays, call-being on the most friendly (grays, callbeing on the most friendly terms, called in three of his late conferes to determine how the provisions of the will should be carried out. Their decision in the matter is worthy of being transcribed:

"LONDON, March 15, 189—,
"Dear Mrs. —: We regret that, after considerable deliberation, we are quite unable to arrive at a conclusion as to the manner our late friend wished to be unable to a real to the conclusion." as to the manner our late friend wished to bequeath his estate, and can only suggest that probate be paid according to the demands of the Legacy and succession duty department, and that the estate be then apportlened by you in the manner in which you believe your late husband desired; taking for your guide in the matter his various conversations with you in the subject, and altogether ignoring the provisions of the will. With kind regards, yours sincerely,

A striking example of the proverb, "A man who is his own lawyer has a fool for a client!" That doctors commit mistakes as well as lawyers is not so generally known, although cases from time to time find their way into the newspapers, Dr. Carpenter, who may be said to have introduced the scientific study of human physiology into England, burned himself to death while attempting to take a Turkish bath in his own room by enveloping himself in a blanket and sitting over a spirit-lamp. However, when a man poisons himself, olanket and sitting over a spirit-lamp. However, when a man poisons himself, it is his own peculiar business which is involved; but when he takes to poisoning others, not with any malicious intent, but simply in error, a natural apprehension may well pervade the public mind. Protection in the matter is extremely simple, as the following narrative will show.

About 8 o'clock on a June evening, a victoria, drawn by a pair of high-stepping bay horses, drove up to a celebrated chemist's shop in Bond street, and an elegantly dressed lady of about twenty-five years of age descended from the carriage. She walked hurriedly through the shop into the dispensing department, and, throwing a piece of paper on the counter said:

"Please make up this prescription and send it at once. I would wait and take it myself, but I am just soing out to dinner; it is very important."

"Please make up this prescription and send it at once. I would wait and take it myself, but I am just going out to dinner; it is very important."

The assistant bowed, took up the prescription, and then seemed to hesitate.

"Well," said the lady, who seemed of a highly nervous, irritable disposition, "well, what is the matter?"

"I am afraid, madam," returned the assistant, "that I cannot dispense this prescription."

"Oh, nonsense," replied the lady; "that is what they said at — in Mayfair, so I brought it on here. I suppose Dr. Blank knows what hy prescribes."

"Doubtless, madam; but although, Dr. Blank is one of the most eminent-of his profession, I dare not make up this prescription, as the strength at which the drug is here ordered, is not allowed by the British Pharmacopoeia."

"Oh, nonsense," repeated the lady, commencing to patter on the floor with her small foot, "this is monstrous. Here is my husband waiting for medicine of the utmost importance to his condition, and two chemists' assistants think they know better what is sgood for him than one of the leading men of the College of Physicians. Give me the prescription, and I wold get it prepared clasewhere."

The assistant was leath to part with the paper.

"If you will allow me, madam," he said, "I will take a cab to Dr. Blank's, and if he confirms the prescription, and it wold was now in a state of extreme irritation," I will not," returned the lady, who was now in a state of extreme irritation, "I will not," in the prepared clay, who was now in a state of extreme irritation, "I will not," in the prepared lost half an bour, and I cannot have further de-hour, and I cannot have further dea second control, and I shall be late for dinner. I have already lost half an hour, and I cannot have further delay." With that she snatched up the prescription and hurried out.

The assistant was seriously perturbed. The mistake in the prescription was a grave one, so grave indeed, that the administration of a single dose would probably prove fatal within two hours. It was possible that some young or inexperienced assistant at some small chemist's, overawed by the great name of the physician and by the lady's imperious manner and elegant attire and equippage, would be found to dispense it. Then trouble would ensue, which might be stopped now. Thinking thus, the assistant told his fellowworker in the dispensary that he would go to Dr. Blank's, and hurrying into Bond street, immed that the these

"Where was he?"
Heally the footman did not know.
"Very important, was it?"
Ah! well, then, he (the footman) must inquire. This he leisurely proceeded so do, and the chemist's assistant, who was of an imaginative turn, amused himself by picturing meanwhile the so do, and the chemist's assistant, who was of an imaginative turn, amused himself by picturing meanwhile the death of the patient, the professional ruin of himself, the Mayfair chemist, and the great physician, the grief and self-reproach of the hady, who, despite her wayward, irritable, and caraless demeanor, was evidently fond of her husband; and he had already arrived at the coroner's jury's verdiet of manslaughter, when the footman returned with the intelligence that his master was dinhing in Mahia Vale. The cab soon whirled the errant knight of the pestle and mortar into the Edgeware road, and drew up at one of the large houses which lie on the right-hand side of Maida Vale, immediately after passing the canal. Dinner was evidently in full progress, and the footman showed the assistant into an ante-room with no very good grace. Here another was eccurred, which preyed on the already irritated nerves of our friend even more than the pevious one at Harley street. At last the door opened, and the doctor entered. He was a dapper little man, about five feet in height, with a pale, thin face, and hair and moustache the color of tow. His clear, steel-blue gray eyes saved his appearance foom heing inaknificant. He looked inquiringly at the assistant, who, bowing, said:

"I am a discensor, sir, at Messrs, —, t about 8 o'clock this evenig a lady, rs. —, presented a prescription signish by you, in which poinss) arsenical as ordered in three-dracken doses." "Good God!" cried the physician; "is possible?"

"Can it have been altered?" be muttered.

"I looked carefully for that, but there was not the slightest sign of an erasure. No, sir," continued the assistant; "I am afraid it is a little mistake on your part. I only fear that it may be made up and administered, and therefore went at once to your house, and learning where you were, came on here."

It took but a few moments for the It took but a few moments for the doctor to make his excuses and return ready for departure, and the cab, oncomore in motion, turned towards the neighborhood of Eaton square. The house at which it now pulled up betokned, far irreater wealth than 'either of the other two at which they had stopped since chartered in Bond street; but an air of quietnde, peculiar to residences in which lie invalids in very critical condition, pervaded the place. The street door was opened noiselessly by a footman before the occupants of the cab were fairly on the doorsten, and the doctor was shown horse a room on the ground floor which answered the pur-poses of a library as much as such room usually do in London houses. "Send me Nurse Moore," said the doc-tor.

Doctor Blank was a little man, and little men are usually quick in their motions; but nover did man, big or little, fly up the stairs at the same rate as he did before the last words were out of the footman's mouth. The assistant followed, but had only reached the second floor when the doctor entered the bedroom. Nurse Norris was standing by the bed measuring a dose of medicine from a bottle. She was a tail, dark young woman of twenty-five, very pleasant looking, and upparently pursuing her vocation with care, as she did not even look up, when the doctor entered.

"None of the franceal"

On that particular evening the assistant at Messrs.— had been gravely cogitating whether he would be justified in welding the girl of his choice, who was too delicate to add to the common purse, on a salary of £100 a year, and had decided on the negative. Six months afterward, a quiet but very happy wedding party returned to a very flourishing chemist's shop in the neighborhood of Cavéndish Square, which bore the name of the assistant over the front as proprietor. And if you ever have occasion to consult the great physician, you may be sure that, whatsoever his opinion of your case may be, he will add, as he hands you your prescription, "Be sure you have it made up at a good chemist's, Mr. — is an extremely careful dispenser, and in addition personally analyzes every drug which goes into his place. Thank you. Good morning."— Chamber's Journal.

CASH IN CAMPAIGNS.

The Foolish Cry Against It when Legitimately Expended.

Washington Post (Ind. Dem.): A week of two ago a correspondent of a western newspaper stated that Mr. Han-na's account books showed that he had expended $100,000 in promoting the Me-Kinley boom. The items were not giv-en in detail, and it is quite improbable that they ever will be; for there is no law, either statutory or moral, which requires such a publication. In this requires such a publication. In this land of the free and home of the brave it is one of the rights of every citizen to spend as much money as he sees fit in exploiting a theory or promoting a boom. One hundred thousand dollars seems a large sum for even a rich and generous man-to put into a preliminary campaign, but the size of the pile does not necessarily imply corruption of any kind.

We notice however that the Paris not necessarily imply corruption of any kind.

We notice, however, that the Boston Gobe is suspicious of Hanna and his cash. It says that "the most expert figurers fall to detect any legitimate uses to which half the sum named could have been put." We do not know who these "most expert figurers" are. They may be the census takers of Chicago, Minne-apolis and St. Paul. Possibly, Mr. Edward Atkinson is one of them, and he may have been assisted by the experts who have, time and time again, figured out a surplus under the present deficit-producing tariff. But whoever they are, they are not doing justice to their reput that the Republican party claims about six millions of voters, the sum of $100,, 000 seems a small amount for the task executed by Mr. Hanna. As to "legiti-mate uses," what are they? All uses that are not violative of law are legiti-mate. It was not unlawful nor immogral states and counties and organize the McKinley forces.

The supposition that one hundred thousand or ten times that amount could thousand of ten times that amount could have bought up the strength shown by McKinley at St. Louis would be absurd as well as an unwarranted reflection on American morals. Does the Globe suppose that there was any money expended in New Hampshire to secure a snubbing of Mr. Reed in the Republican convention of that state? "Could a few patry dollars out of that hundred thousand have deflected Vermont at a critical juncture and laid the Reed boom on its beam ends? No, the voters of the United States and the agents whom they send to conventions are not purchased cattle.

We do not believe that any amount of cattle.

We do not believe that any amount of money could have bought the St. Louis nomination, nor do we believe that it would be possible, with unlimited resources, to buy the Chicago nomination. The Globe inquires. "At the pace of spending money started by Hanna, what may it not cost to pull McKinley through before the whole campaign in over?" We will not attempt to figure out this problem, preferring to leave its solution to "the most expert figurers." Buf there will be lots of money expended by each and all of the three principal parties, and even the smaller parties will find uses, "legitimate uses," for many sheckels, It may be the good fortung of the Democrats to repeat their happy experience of 1888 and 1892, in each of which years they found a patriotic and wealthy citizen willing to put up $50,000. But nobody has any reason to fear that a presidential election will be bought. There are honeed, lawful and proper ways of using much money in a great national campaign.

It is understood that a considerable amount of the exchange against recent purchases of securities for foreign account has not as yet been disposed of. Some comment was made over the withdrawal to-day of many banking institutions from the commercial paper market, the action being attributed to the prevailing financial uncertainty. The offerings of prime paper moderate, and in the continued case of money, a speedy review of demand is expected. The market as a whole was narrow and the movement of prices irregular, with a stiffening tendency. London prices were disappointing and operations here on that account insignificant. Speculation therefore was governed by professionals. The opening was weak, but liberal purchasing orders advanced prices which held until mid-day when a bear raid on grangers and flugidation in Sugar caused a reaction and trading became apathetic, although prices advanced sclightly. Bears took advanage of these conditions in the closing hours and crowded down prices, especially Sugar and Tobacco. The closing was heavy in tone.
